When I think of family, and the things that you tell your own grandchildren about the way things were growing up, and your happiest memories, Uncle Arnold was always there... Every Sunday dinner, holiday, and family gathering.. Smiling, laughing and enjoying things with us, giving the best hugs ever, and helping us learn about what's really important... I've always felt that our family was rich in the things that cannot be bought, but are most important of all.... That made us better people... The Love of God, family, and love for each other... Things that helped us succeed in life... And these words by a favorite poet remind me so much of the things we learned from him... To laugh often and much... To win the respect of intelligent people and the affection of children.... To win the appreciation of honest critics and endure the betrayal of false friends... To appreciate beauty and find the best in others.... To leave the world a bit better, whether by a healthy child, a garden patch, or a redeemed social condition... To know that even one life has breathed easier because you have lived.... This is to have succeeded... Ralph Waldo Emerson
